

Transcript of FutureMS Edinburgh participants – invitation to 10 year wave

[Georgia] Hello, I am Georgia and I am the lead study practitioner for FutureMS in Edinburgh.

[Callum] And I am Callum, and I'm a participant in the FutureMS study.

[Georgia] This spring, we'll be opening our Edinburgh site for the 10-year FutureMS study visits. Reaching this ten-year mark is a real milestone, and your continued participation has been incredibly important to the success of the study. We would kindly like to invite you all back for your ten-year visit.

[Callum] As a participant in the study, it's been really rewarding to know that my contribution will help people living with MS in the years to come. The time I've dedicated – and that all of you have dedicated – over the first five years of the study has helped build our understanding of MS after diagnosis. That's why it's so important to come back for the ten-year visit, so we can continue building the long-term knowledge that's needed to better understand MS and improve care in the future.

[Georgia] We'll be in touch by post, text or phone call with details about your next visit. For some of you, your visit may not be scheduled until next year or even the year after, but in the mean time we'll keep you updated through our newsletters.

[Callum] I'm looking forward to returning for my ten-year visit and seeing how all of our contributions over the years are making a difference for people with MS.

[Georgia] We really look forward to meeting you all again! Many thanks for your continued support.

Anne Rowling Regenerative Neurology Clinic, University of Edinburgh, April 2026

Video at media.ed.ac.uk/media/FutureMS%20Edinburgh%20participants%20-%20invitation%20to%2010%20year%20wave/1_23v7oI5k